HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 15TH, 1876.

ONE of the gravest problems in American politics is undoubtedly that of the naturalization of Chinese immigrants in the United States. On the one hand, the constitution of the States forbids Congress to make any distinction of race or colour. On the other hand, the people of the Pacific States contemplate with some natural alarm the possibilities which open out from the free admis- pay each. sion to the rights of citizens of the Chinese. One Californian journal in discussing the question asks :- " Are the Chinese to become the rulers at our elections? Are we to have probably be remembered by many of our a Chinese Governor, Congressman, and readers. The prisoners, with other Chinese, Legislators? Most assuredly these will through a mercantile firm here. The engagefollow the naturalization of the hundreds ments were all signed at the police office, and of thousands of 'heathen Chinee' who their contract fully explained to them, an adcome to this State. We cannot absorb such They were shipped on board the British schooner a mass of heatherism. The mouse cannot eat the elephant, and we cannot swallow millions of Asiatics without being more or it is believed, murdered them, throwing the less heathenized." Another paper writes:---"The question may be asked why Chinamen by the police-some of them being caught by are not as fit for naturalization as negroes | the Maharajah's men. Though there is little The main reasons are that they do not learn the English language, or adopt our customs, bodies had been recovered, by which death could that they have immigrated voluntarily in be positively proved. The jury found the prigreater numbers, that they might come by to 10 years rigorous imprisonment—Singapore millions, and that they collect in a few places | Thines. where they might outnumber the white voters." The Alta contends that neither Chinamen nor Indians are entitled, under the Federal Code, to become citizens, and quotes a passage from the United States Statutes to prove that no alien can be naturalised unless he is white or African. "White and black are admitted," says our Californian contemporary, but "yellow and red are excluded."

There is not much in the arguments employed quibble, which is very unlikely to have the description of the bear of the bea weight with the authorities. Already some few. Chinamen have become naturalised, and their example will doubtless be followed by more. In process of time the Chinese will, if this goes on, form an appreciable element in the voting power, and be able to decide the elections in some districts. This is the evil the Californians dread. But there is apparently no cure for it, under present conditions. The Government can scarcely Reep the Chinese away by force. Nor. perhaps, if such a proposal was put to the California, would it be carried Chinese labour has proved in the past one result would be most disastrons to the only remedy that can be devised, so far as we can see, is to allow the Chinese to naturalise as citizens, but impose a condition acquainted with the customs of the country. and know how to exercise their vote honestly in common fairness, be exacted from the Chinaman. He is certainly more than equal to the mass of Africans in intelligence, and is as fit to exercise the privilege of voting. In a country whose institutions are so domocratic as to give every man equal rights, it would be manifestly unjust and illiberal to withhold the franchise permanently from "the Chinese. It is open augstion whether it was wise to place political power in the hands of the newly liberated slave; but, as that has been done, it is too late to hold it back from the free Asiatic. The question is a complex one, and must necessarily be productive of difficulties, many Chipamen would sell their vote as soon as they found it had a market value, but this is no more than many of their Caucasian friends do, and if they are caught in the act of making it a marketable commodity they ought to be deprived of it altogether. The Americans will have to put down corruption of this character with a firm hand, and the philanthropic among them must labour to raise the Chinese communities to a higher moral standpoint. But however earnestly they labour, however wisely they may legislate, it will probably take genera. tions to smooth away the difficulties which Chinese immigration must necessarily create. Most nations have their political puzzles, and the Great Republic is no exception to the rule. One great problem, the slave question, has, after a vast expenditure of blood and treasure, been settled; but others are pretty sure, among her heterogeneous population, to spring up. There is little fear, however, of her not being able to successfully surmount them as they arise-Meantime the restless and onergetic Califormans-must-exercise faith and patience with regard to the Chinese question, and on no account allow their prejudices to launch them into an illiberal policy contrary to the traditions which have now for one hundred years been the pride and glory of Americans. not of homage due to his exalted rank. Already, thanks to the inspiration of Sophtas, Ilemas, and the mon of that cloth, the exasperation among the Moslems is becoming dangerous. and their ill will is turned, not so much against the Christians as against the Government, whom they charge with abject wonkness for their proposal to introduce innovations in the laws of the country at the Giacur's instigation. The Imperial Firman of Reforms and the civil war in Herzegovina are both, in the Moslem's estimation, the consequence of the Porte's subserviency to the European Powers. They bear no good will to the Powers, but they harbour something very like contempt for the Porte. Already symptoms of the evil mind of the people towards the Christians are apparent in occasional breaches of the public peace, reports of which find their way into the newspapers, notwithstanding the gag imposed by a rigid though stolid censorship of the public press. A Christian, living under the protection of the French flag, had taken up his quarters in he ward of Ainaly-Tohesme, at Pera, inhabited by a mixed population of Moslems and Christians, On Thursday morning last, the day after his installation in his new abode, a mob of Turkish women, children, and men of all ages assembled before the house, smashed all its windows, broke through the door and invaded the house, crying "Get out, Ginours!" The Moothfar, or mayor, and the Imam, or priest of the district, led the riot. Three of the Zaptieha, attracted by the clamour and by the sight of the furniture, which the rabble sent down flying from the windows, deemed it their duty to interfere, but, far from protecting the Ohristian, they made common cause with the law breakers. They knocked the man down with the buit-end of their carbines, and dragged him, his wife, and children to the station-house, whence the poor family were released after four hours durance. The house meanwhile was gutted by the populace from the basement to the garret. The humour of the multitude, in short, is by no means reassuring. I hear persons sucer at the idea that any real mischief may be apprhended on the part of such wretched binds as the rabble of Stamboul consists of, and I am told that "a whiff of grape shot would be sufficient to clear the streets of whole legions of such beggars." The question is, where are the men to fire the grape shot ? for, in the case I have quoted, the local authorities and the public. force were on the side of the populace, and in any effervescence of evil passions public order has no worse enemies to fear than the very soldiers whose duty it ought to be to maintain At Frzeroum, in Armeniu, a woman of the people, presecuted by the unwelcome advances

AUTOGRAPH COLLECTING.

An ingenious mode of obtaining a valuable l collection of contemporary autographs at a most moderate rate was adopted about 1853. by an individual who called himself by turns. Soriono and Ludovic Picard, and alternately personated a poor musician petitioning for leave to dedicate his compositions to some more fortunate brother of the art, and a man of letters, driven to despair by repeated failures, and sorely tempted to put an end to his miseries by suicide. Finding this latter alias by far the more profitable of the two. he gradually abandoned the other, and devoted his den exclusively to the composition of a series of heart-rending appeals addressed to the most eminent authors of the day, wherein, after depicting his misfortunes in a manner likely to excite their sympathy, and invariably concluding with a touching allusion to the doubts and hesitations which still delayed the execution of his project, he, as a last resource, implored their counsel. The result of these confidential disclosures was the receipt by the soi-disant Ludovic Picard of a pieces of profound and eloquent reasoning, which were forthwith consigned (probably instead of being dispersed picemeal among was a friendless orphan. twenty or thirty different collections, has not been preserved intact; it would have been curious and deeply interesting to compare he anti-suicidal arguments of such writers and thinkers as Beranger, Lacordaire, Lamennais, Henri Conscience, Madamo de Girudin, George Sand, Dumas, Eugene Sue, Proudbon, Jules Janin, and our own Charles Dickens .- St. James's Magazine.
